This thesis deals with combinatorial and geometric aspects of linear optimization, and consists of two parts. In the first part, we address a conjecture formulated in 2008 and stating that the largest possible average diameter of a bounded cell of a simple hyperplane arrangement of n hyperplanes in dimension d is not greater than the dimension d . The average diameter is the sum of ...

Recent results on the geometric and computational aspects of rhythm, melody, and voice-leading are reviewed, connections to established areas of computer science, mathematics, statistics, computational biology, and crystallography are pointed out, and new open problems are proposed.
